

“Students who can demonstrate excellence and accomplishment in multiple disciplines have a leg up in the college admissions process.

Rich learning in the arts helps students realize that their education is more than a test score. They learn responsibility for making their own future. ”

*Richard Siegesmund, Ph.D.
Associate Professor, Art Education
University of Georgia*

Georgia’s colleges and universities value prospective students who take a year or more of art courses in high school. Art is much more than just drawing. Art teaches skills rarely found in the typical classroom-- skills like observing, imagining, innovating through exploration, and reflective self-evaluation. In art, students learn to work cooperatively with others, present ideas, and construct multiple solutions to a given problem. Choose an art course this year. It’s preparation for college and preparation for life.
