

“Gordon College is pleased to receive applications from students who have completed arts (art, music or theatre) classes. These students show reflection of information processed; they are willing to experiment with a variety of classes.

This is a valuable lesson as young adults attempt to quantify their life’s passion and work into a specific course of study.”

Georgia’s colleges and universities value prospective students who take a year or more of art courses in high school. Art is much more than just drawing. Art teaches skills rarely found in the typical classroom-- skills like observing, imagining, innovating through exploration, and reflective self-evaluation. In art, students learn to work cooperatively with others, present ideas, and construct multiple solutions to a given problem. Choose an art course this year. It’s preparation for college and preparation for life.
